XXth OLYMPIC GAMES OPEN WITH RICH PAGEANT

10,000 competitors from 122 countries

TUNICH (Reuter).—The 20th Olympics blossomed into being here yesterday as 0,000 competitors paraded together in a blaze of sunlit pageantry. The bitteress of squabbling which threatened to mar the most lavish games in Olympic istory were forgotten as 80,000 spectators paid a noisy tribute to the sportsien and women — the elite athletes of 122 nations.

Big hand for Israelis

MUNICH (Reuter). — Israel received one of the loudest and iongest cheers of the 122 nations taking part in the opening ceremony here yesterday.

> The 26 men and two women, led by marksman Henri Hershkovitz, seemed slightly surprised at the extreme warmth of the welcome and several of them grinned happily as the applause from the 80,000 persisted.

The Israelis filed into the spectacular, flag-decked stadium shortly after the Iranians and just before the scheduled appearance of the Jordanians. Jordan, however, turned out to be the only absentees in the programme. There was no immediate expladanian competitors had arrived in time

The 31-man Egyptian squad was the second into the arena, behind the leading Greek troupe. Dressed in maroon blazers their flag was borne by Kamal Kamel, the young trainer of the national basketball team.

Towards the end of the three and-half-hour ceremony, most of which they spent waiting for the other countries to enter, the Egyptians were clearly a little tired of the proceedings. Several were sitting down staring at the parade through the legs of col-leagues, others had wandered off to fraternize with adjacent

E-Sa'eka man killed in 'accident'

A leader of the Syrian-backed e-Sa'eka terrorist organization was killed in Lebanon on Friday night under mysterious circumstances.

In an official statement e-Sa'eka said yesterday that Ahmed al-Fakhri, who was referred to as the militia commander for the Lebanese region, was killed in a car accident while patrolling the Be-ka'a area, east Lebanon. The statement, however, added that the circumstances under which the highranking leader, known as "Abu Jasser," died were being invesdied were being investigated.

Al-Fakhri's death came after a series of assassination attempts against top terrorist leaders whose lives were being threatened by a "Support Lebanon" clandesine group, which is pressing the ter-rorists to quit Lebanon.

The death of al-Fakhri further took place at a time the various terrorist organizations in Lebanon are reportedly involved in widespread internal strife.

Belrut's "Al-Muharrer" newspaper said yesterday that a number of terrorist groups had over the weekend held a meeting in Beirut which turned into a demonstration against Yasser Arafat, chief of the Fatah. NEW AMIN ORDER

Uganda to grab foreign enterprises

President Idi Amin yesterday said his plans for black Ugandans to take over foreign-owned businesses would be extended to include European enterprises "whether they like it or not."

Speaking at a police training college here, General Amin said the first phase in Uganda's "eco-nomic war" was to expel all Asians with British, Indian, Pakistani or Bangladesh nationality.

"The second phase will be for black Ugandans to buy all shops, factories, cotton gins and businesses owned by Europeans and Asians, whether they like it or not," President Amin said.

He did not give a time limit. It is believed that there are as many as 10,000 Europeans in Uganda but relatively few of them are em-ployed in domestic commerce or in ocally based companies.

Amin told the police yesterday that his top priority was to Ugandans and added: "Even if you go to Russia, Britain, the U.S. and other developed countries, they give top priority to their own citizens." CHOSEN BY GOD

President Amin said that the armed forces had a duty to put the economy of Uganda into the hands of Ugandans. His government had been chosen by God, he said, and "Its formation is the salvation of the people." Defence Minister Charles Oboth-Ofumbi on Friday signed an order empowering authorities to intercept Uganda government might direct.

Meanwhile, the threatened influx of 50,000 Asians with British passports expelled from Uganda split British government race relations officials and presented health authorities with a major problem. Bernard Perkins, a member of the 12-man Community Relations Commission set up by the U.K. government to smooth race relations, resigned because he opposed accepting the refugees.

Health officials at London's Heath-row airport said the incoming Asians would pose a major problem for the airport authorities.

All will receive full medical in-spection, including chest X-rays to be developed on the spot. Each arrival will take 10 minutes to process and there is room for only 28 at a time. Each airliner is expected to bring in between 200 and 350 Asians. The first batch is expected this week.

Kurd predicts new war with Iraq government

CAIRO (AP). — The possibility of a new outbreak of warfare between Kurdish tribesmen and the Iraq government was raised yesterday in a newspaper interview with a Kurdish leader. Karim Habib was quoted by the newspaper "Akhbar El Yom" as predicting warfare unless five Kurdish ministers in the Baghdad government receive real power and a March 1970 agreement to give the Kurd-ish-populated area regional autonomy is implemented.

However, Iraq government officials told the newspaper that 90 per cent of the agreement has been implemented, and that the Kurds are taking an active part in running the national government.

The article concluded that most observers would expect the Kurds to fail in any future battle due to the loss of many of their ailies and the assumption "their fighting spirits have been almost quenched if not totally vanished" since the treaty of 1970 permitted them to begin selling their land "and enjoying peace and security in the vaffeys."

Swiss army unhorsed

The decision now swaiting parliamentary confirmation was made by the Federal Council only with great hesitation, after eloquent pleas to retain at least some of the cavalry. A petition won 400,000 signatures. The Government case is that manpower is urgently needed for effective compact units. These, it is officially stated, are only just sufficiently manned for defence, under the Swiss universal compulsory military service system, with annual retraining of reservicies. etraining of reservists.

Horses are loved in Switzerland thorses are loved in swinzerand almost as, much as in Britain or Reland. They are still extensively used for ploughing and other agricultural duties on file stoping mountainside fields, and the great brewary at Rheinfelden, near Basic, has a magnificent turnout of ancient drays drawn by four horses each. In Geneva, the annual riding and jumping competition, the Concours Hippique, is the highlight of the autumn season and attracts compe-titors from all over the world. It culminates in a great ball at which uniforms are worn. As a tourist attraction, Geneva also still has horse-drawn open carriages, seating four persons, for tours around the city. In fact, the present Swiss Army is far from dashing and brilliant in appearance. The soldier's uniform is still a shapeless grey-green and he still often carries an enor-mous pack on his back, frequently flanked by a spare pair of moun-tain boots, the weight of which makes him bend forward in a far from military posture. To their great good fortune, the Swiss soldiery has not been tried in battle for well over a century, so that its fighting qualities must be a matter of conjecture. On the other hand the Swiss Army is a true citizens army. Each soldier takes his rifle home with him (nowadays an automatic one) together with live ammunition so that, in an emergency he can take the field with a min mum of delay.

18th chess game a draw

REYKJAVIK (Reuter). — Bobby Fischer on Friday moved to within two points of becoming the first American to win the world chess championship after drawing with Boris Spassky in the resumed 18th game. The draw came after 47 moves, with both players simultaneously offering to shake hands in a sign that they agreed the match was over. Fischer now leads by 101/2 points to 74 in the 24-game series Experts here thought Friday's finish to what they termed a difficult game must have been disappointing for Fischer, who had appeared to be winning shortly before adjournment on Thursday night on the 42nd move.

They said that further analysis would probably show that Fischer missed an opportunity to win more than once. Spassky, they added, 47. seems to be fighting hard to close the three-point gap, but is unable to muster the extra force necessary to win against Fischer.

The Soviet champion, playing black, gave an indication on Friday afternoon when he walked on the stage two minutes late for the start (Fischer was 12 minutes late) that the resumed game would be KHARTOUM (Reuter). - Sudanese

Karl Kluehspies, an architect deeply involved in the citizens movement, remarks rather sadly that success on their part is measured by the fact that the number of buildings demolished in the inner city is not rising as rapidly as before. "We can't leave any legal stone unturned," he argues, "to save the characteristic buildings here which go toward making life worthwhile. Cause must be brought to court so that we can test the existing laws." He cites the successful scuttling of a project two years ago to tear down a popular Munich care to make way for yet another bank. Citizens' groups discovered that a long-forgotten city law stipulated that city approval was required for a change of function of ground floor premises in an historic area. Since then, the city has been reminded that it need not remain powerless in the face of real estate speculators, and can halt the destruction court close to the Ron Cinema, but of Munich before there is nothing

Professor Usdan said; "When one begins to catalogue the current dissatisfactions with American education, Youth Aliya techniques

"Youth Aliya progress — whether in the residential children's villages or in the all-day centres — with their emphasis upon youngsters prac-tising self-direction and self-govern-ance, would have considerable appeal to innumerable youngsters in this country who are turned off by the rigid patterns and what Charles Sil-berman calls the 'mindlessness' of American education

"The schools in this country are not only failing the poorest quarter of our students, the children of the poor and minorities, but we are not doing well educationally with the top three-quarters of your children and mine. These often are the turned-off youngsters of affluent suburbia who yearn for relevancy and ostensibly would love the 'learning by doing' curriculum which is such an integral component of the Youth Allya approach.

"Our more affluent young puzzle us and demand the independence that might be provided by an open and more flexible educational system that would emancipate them from extended adolescence. They are bored and it may be that drugs, cars, the boob tube and sex are indeed more exciting and rewarding than detached schools which have become a kind of irrelevant 'psychological dullsville'."

The Coleman Report — he is a sociologist at Johns Hopkins University — the most comprehensive educational study of its kind ever undertaken, focused upon the saliency of family background in determining student achievement. Coleman data indicated that student learning, in other words, was more attributable

Studies conducted in other river basins, since Itai-itai was brought to public notice by Doctors Noboru Hagino and Minoru Kawano in 1955, indicate that only this part of the Jinzu basin is affected by such an impossible level of cad-

NO STRANGERS

The Japanese are no strangers to by the range and complexity of the laws, regulations and other measures more recently introduced to control pollution and help the afflicted.

As early as 1956 when Ital-ital was still regarded as a nutritional disturbance the Toyama Prefecture began a nutrition survey in its precincts and administered Vitamin D to victims of the disease.

Continued study soon indicated, however, that the cause of this curious condition was acute cadmium poisoning and in 1961 the district government set up what was appropriately called a Strange Endemic Disease Control Committee and began close scientific research into the causes and controls of the disease.

Japan's Ministry of Health and Welfare joined in shortly after and research has been going on on a number of fronts and levels. RELIEF

Relief, which is provided through local authorities, was taken over as far as nationwide diseases are concerned by the central government since 1970.

In the last five years up to the end of 1971 the number of new victims of Itai-ital disease has declined sharply each year from 73 in 1967, to one.

So far this year not a single case has been officially recognized. In that time a total of 123 cases were identified, including 31 who died. Since 1968 nearly 500 Ital-ital patients and relatives of the dead have sued the Company for compensation. PEACE FEELERS

IT is beginning to look just of painstaking effort to encourpossible that the 1967 war may, after all, have been the war to end wars in this part of the Middle East - that is, if we can continue to treat the undoubted progress towards peace that has been achieved since then not as a football to be tossed around in internal politics or as a convenient subject for political originality.

There is progress. Its two most important elements are the almost complete quiet that has reigned, on the Canal since August 1970, and on the Jordan river border since the following month, when King Hussein finally broke up the Fatah camps and concentrations in Jordan and expelled the terrorists. Despite Friday's bomb, Gaza has followed suit, and the people living in the Strip are no longer terrorized and prevented from attempting to build new lives in some kind of coexistence with Israel

As further evidence of the return to normalcy there are the many tens of thousands of Arab summer visitors, who come, mostly to see their families, some to spend a cool summer in Ramallah, some to see Israel, others to seek medical treatment or even simply wellpaid work for a period. There are the Arab students who travel to Arab countries for a university education and come home for summer holidays and who certainly do not appear as hostile as Arab students studying in Europe. All these, and aspects of trade and agricultural advance and employment patterns are patterns of life to be expected under conditions of peace and of open borders. They have been created by five years age co-existence and avoid anything that will lead to friction.

Just recently the increased confidence created by this form of tacit co-existence has apparently resulted in some peace feelers by King Hussein. No reliable details of any proposals have been made public, but according to some sources they could include far-reaching concessions to Israel demands for geographical physical security rather than verbal agreements.

The immediate result of these rumours was violent attacks on King Hussein and his regime by several Arab states, and the next, predictably, declarations by the hard-pressed King that he had never made any such offers and never would. In a televised reply King Hussein used a significant phrase: the peace we make must be valid for future generations, and therefore must not be based on the current military position or any other transitory factor.

After three generations of Israelis who have had to fight against Arab hostility, we also seek a peace that will last for generations, and it cannot be concluded in a hurry or under the pressure of other Arab states on Jordan. The peace will have to weigh considerations of Israel security and of the political rights and wishes of the population of the West Bank and Gaza long before the personal aspirations of King Hussein. He does not own the West Bank, and made few friends there while he ruled it. His desire for peace is welcome and important, but it must not be allowed to distract us for one moment from the much more important business of building a lasting relationship with the people of the West Bank, and giving them time to discover what future they seek for them-

After all, it is what those in power think and say that counts.

The personality cult of Mao in China has been noticeably toned may claim to be, Chairman Mao one. Some obthroughout the Cultural Revolution servers regard this as an indication of moderate policy while others associate it with the preparation for the succession issue. But few seem to have noticed that the Chinese press has been holding Lin Piac responsible for the "creation of a personality cuit of Mao in order to kick him upstairs." Again, this is Mao's usual way of shifting blame on others.

TRUSTS NO ONE

Perhaps Mao's main characteristic as a leader is his inborn suspicion. Like his idol Tsao Tsao, he trusts no one, not even his own father or wife. It is almost impossible to name a single person in the Chinese hierarchy who has won his complete confidence. Take the now defunct Mao-Lin alliance for instance. Even at the time when he solely relied on Lin Piao and his Army to destroy Liu Shao chi and the Party machine, he sent his daughter Li Na (airs Hatao Ll) to infiltrate the Army by becoming the Editor-in-Chief of the Liberation Army Daily, not to mention a few other confidants he placed strategically in the Army's Political Department. But his master stroke must be the successful enlistment of Lin Tou-tou, Lin Piac's daughter by his previous marriage, to be an informant against her father, making use of her conflicts with her step-mother Yeh Chun. These intrigues alone could have provoked Lin to plot against him, if only for the sake of self-preservation.

Indeed, up to now Mao's suspicious nature appears to have operated to his advantage. But on the other hand, it must be pointed out that none of his chief associates can for a moment trust him. If he could get rid of Liu Shao-chi and Lin Piao, his two official successors, once their usefulness had expired who else can dare serve him without apprehension? As the Chinese saying goes, "If the monarch treats his subjects like weeds... then the subjects are bound to regard the monarch as their enemy." This seems to be the classic dilemma Chairman Mao is now in. At the age of 78, obstinate and insular, he cannot be expected to change his personality and nature. It is true that Mao has recently begun to advocate the collective leadership which he once strongly rejected, but the seeds of dishar-mony he has sown among other Chinese leaders may have gone too deep to be uprooted. Ironically, members of the old guard such as Marshals Yeh Chien-ying, Nich Jung-chen and Hau Hafang-chien to nager replied that they certainly whom he now turns, have all, at "aim to take good care of passenone time or another, been shelved for their suspect loyalty.
